Vermicompost is a type of organic fertilizer. It is derived by composting organic waste by using various species of earthworms. Final product does not contain any earthworms.

Vermicompost is more useful in small scale organic farming, kitchen gardening, container gardening & indoor gardening rather than agriculture.

Vermicompost is added in soil mixture during potting of a new plant. One part Garden soil, one part coco-peat & one part vermicompost (1:1:1), all three are thoroughly mixed and added to the pot. This combination is often referred as a universal potting mixture.

A handful of vermicompost can be added to a pot every 2-3 months. It then ensures the healthy and fast growth of plants.

Perlite is a naturally occurring mineral, and it exists in nature as a type of volcanic glass. When water saturates volcanic obsidian glass over time, perlite starts to form.

Exfoliated Perlite particles create tiny air tunnels which allow moisture, oxygen and nutrients to flow freely to roots, as and when required by the plants. It also serves as an insulator to reduce extreme soil temperature fluctuations. Improves structure and texture of clayey and silt soils prevents soil compaction and surface crusting.

Adding perlite to the soil helps to improve the drainage of water away from the roots while leaving the soil with the right amount of moisture to spur growth.

Moss sticks help the plant to develop many tiny roots throughout the surface as these poles are permeable.

Moss sticks have a high water holding capacity, enabling the roots of the plant to grip into the natural organic fibre.

Better water retention, helps root penetration, biodegradable, strong and long-lasting.

Moss poles support the growth of your plants, train their growth habit, and, for those vines with adventitious roots, provide extra micronutrients to your plants.
